

ABSTRACT

A golf club head for use in a putter includes: a body having a top and a bottom, an aligning portion formed on the top of the body, and a striking portion having a cavity and formed on the bottom of the body. By using the aligning portion to align a golf ball with an intended movement path toward a target hole, the golf ball can be hit by the striking portion to move along the intended path toward the target hole.

* * * * *